SOCIOLOGICAL REASONING A NON-POPPERIAN SPACE OF ARGUMENTATION

By Jean-Claude Passeron

Edited & Introduced by Professor Derek Robbins, Translated by Rachel Gomme

Do the social sciences provide universally valid explanations of human behaviour in society? Passeron thinks not. However, this doesn't mean that social scientists can only represent the diverse narratives of ordinary people. Passeron argues vigorously that sociological reasoning enables us, within a historical continuum, to analyse the dialectic between context and individual intention, the general and the particular. This is what defines the social sciences as 'in-between' sciences.
